LIFE'S LENGTHENING SPAN.

The average length of human life is constantly increasing. The more progressive and civilized a nation, the longer is the average life there, and a writer in the Technical World says that if the average length continues to increase as it has during 100 years the time must come when centenarians will be the rule, not the exception.

The average longevity in the United States at present is placed at 44 years. Records kept in the New England states show that in 1789 the average life was 35 years. In 1855 it was 40 years. In 1895 the average was 45 years and in 1903 it was 47 years in those states.

The increase in longevity in Europe is equally significant. In Switzerland in the sixteenth century the average life was only 21.2 years, but in the seventeenth century it had reached 25.7 years. The eighteenth century showed an average of 32.6, and in the nineteenth century there was an increase to 39.7 years. The average life of all Europe was 18 years in the sixteenth century. Now it is 40 years, a gain of more than 100 per cent in three centuries.

Civilized nations, such as the United States, England, Germany, France and Sweden, have greatly lengthened the chain of life. In 1881 the average life was 23.7 and 200 years ago the average was 19 years. China's record is only fractionally different from that of India.

The comparative figure are interesting, but they are not conclusive that centenarians will become common.

Civilization is placing a higher value on human life. Sanitation, adequate housing and better working conditions are mute testimony of the march of the nations.—Oregon Journal.
